

TRAVIS, WENDELL GIVE $5,000 BAIL

Motion Made to Inspect Grand Jury Minutes by Attorney for State Comptroller.

State Attorney General Charles D. Newton said today that he could not see why the indictment of Comptroller James A. Wendell on four counts of grand larceny and "wrongfully converting and paying out State money" should change Mr. Wendell's status or prevent his being sworn into office on Saturday next. The Attorney General contends that the indictment, which embraced also State Comptroller Eugene M. Travis and Albert L. Judson, a bond broker, is "merely an accusation."

Mr. Steuer, attorney for Travis, has moved to inspect the minutes of the Grand Jury. This will be argued tomorrow morning. All the defendants entered a formal plea of not guilty and furnished bonds of $5,000 each when arraigned before Judge McIntyre in General Sessions. It is alleged that Judson made $100,000 by the sale of bonds to the State, many of which were purchased by the State at prices far in excess of the actual market value.

PARROT DID NOT HAVE TO TESTIFY

Prisoner's Story Such That Jury Convicted Him in Five Minutes.

Frederick Kotlatsky accused of stealing four parrots from the Zoo in Central Park, had this to say about it today: "I live at No. 62 Fifth Avenue, Astoria, L. I., and I need exercise. It has been my habit to come over to Central Park before dawn and take a walk. On the early morning of Nov. 19, therefore, I was walking through the park in the vicinity of the Zoo when I heard blood curdling cries of 'Help! Murder! Police!'

"Running in the direction from which the cries came I found myself before a huge cage, which I tore open and entered. To my great indignation I found that it was a false alarm, and that the cries were uttered by a parrot. I seized the bird for the purpose of administering appropriate punishment, and had just begun to spank it when I was arrested."

He was caught by Thomas Mitchell, the night watchman, and today it took a jury just five minutes to find him guilty of burglary in the third degree. He will be sentenced by Judge Nett tomorrow.
